ABOUT THE SOUTH. On this head he says:

Continued opposition to the full and free enjoyment of the rights of citizenshtp, conforred upon the colored people by the recent amendments to the constitution, still prevails in several of the late slave-holding states. It has, perhaps, not been manifested in the recent election to any large extent in acts of violence or intimidation. It has, however, by fraudulent practices in connection with the ballots, with the regulations as to the places and manuer of voiling, and with counting, returning and canvassing the votes cast, been successful in defeating the exercise of the right preservative of all asked the attention of congress to the urgent necessity of a reformation of the civil service system of the government. My views concerning the dangers of patronage, or appointments for personal or partisan considerations, have been strengthened by my observation and experience in the executive office, and I believe these dangers threaten the stability of the government. Abuses so serious in their nature cannot be permanently tolerated. They tend to become more alarming with the enlargement of administrative service, as the growth of the country in population increases the number of officers and placemen employed.

The reasons are imperative for the adoption of fixed rules for the regulation of appointments, promotions, and removals, establishing a uniform method, having exclusively in view, in every instance, the

As president he had absolute control over these appointments; congress had no power over them; the senate could only refuse to confirm, and certainly could not dictate to him the appointment of any individual. The only compulsion which dictated such appointments was the president's own dread of exposure at the hands of the men who counted him in, should they fail to reap their reward in the form of patronage. Hence the utter breakdown of every attempt at remedy for the master evil of our political system, the evil which has already transformed our government from a

ABOUT CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

In my former annual messages I have asked the attention of congress to the urgent necessity of a reformation of the civil service system of the government. My views concerning the dangers of patronage, or appointments for personal or partisan considerations, have been strengthened by my When in 1865, the first time in the republican current that a question as to what was the constitutional vote of a state arose, a republican majority in both houses, almost complete in its unanimity, having all the power of the two houses, declared by a joint ruic that no vote from a state, whether it were a single vote or a double vote or a paper parporting to be either, should have any effect upon the election of a president of the United States unless both houses of congress, not the president of the senate, not any body under law even, but unless both houses of congress, in their constitutional character and without far in the ind failen off this and perished.
